4. A corner separated from the remainder of a field by some obstacle, such as a road.

Ken. Farmer: 'You don't quite understand what a went is, Sir. When a corner is cut off a field, as it might be, by a road, then we call it a went' (D.W.L.).

Hence Wented, ppl. adj. of a field: having a corner cut off by a road, &c. ib. 5. The bend of a fishing-line when not cast in one stretch. Bnff.<sup>1</sup> 6. Part of a 'fulling-stock' ; see below.

w.Som.<sup>1</sup> It consists of a block of wood curved and tapering, made to fit the back or 'scat' of the 'stock.' Wents are of different thicknesses, and their use is to contract the size, or capacity of the stock, as may be required to suit the thickness or quantity of the cloth to be milled. If the stock is slack, i.e. if the cloth does not sufficiently fill it, the heavy feet will cut the cloth instead of milling it.

The adage is supposed to have arisen from a contest between two journey-men shoemakers, in or near Exeter, which place has been always remarkable for speaking truth, about the property of a whetstone—when it was agreed between them, that he, who could tell the greatest lye, should be intitled to it. Whereupon the first pretended that he once drove a ten penny nail through the moon—which the other swore was true—for he was himself on the other side and clinched it. By which he gained the whetstone and the character of a more notorious liar. Hence 'a clincher,' and 'give him the whetstone,' Horae Subsecivae (1777) 465. n.Dev. *Exm. WHIG, sb.<sup>1</sup> and v.<sup>1</sup> Obs. or obso. Sc. Irel. Nhb. Dur. Also written wig Nhb.<sup>1</sup> 1. sb. An old name for a Presbyterian or Covenanter; see below. Cf. quig, sb.<sup>2</sup>, whigamore.

Sc. A name, imposed on those in the 17th cent. who adhered to the Presbyterian cause. By rigid Episcopalians, it is still given to Presbyterians in general; and, in the w. of Sc., even by the latter, to those who in a state of separation from the established church, profess to adhere more strictly to Presbyterian principles (JAM.); The sw. counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word Wiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the Whiggamors, and shorter the Whiggs. Now in that year [1648] after the news came down of Duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise, and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching on the head of their parishes, with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The Marquis of Argyll and his party came and headed them, they being about 6,000. This was called the whiggamors' inroad; and, ever after that, all that opposed the court, came, in contempt, to be called Whiggs, BURNET Own Times (1753) I. 58 (ib.). Gall. Their not keeping the church, their conversing with Whiggs (as they called the Persecuted people), Gallovidian (1901) III. 55. Nhb.<sup>1</sup> It is rather curious to be informed by Mr. Brand, that he read a public register in St. Andrew's Church Vestry (Newcastle), intimating that there was a burying place in Sidgate of the quigs (Whigs). And to this day, dissenters, in many parts of Northumberland, are termed 'whiggs,' Impartial Hist. of Newcastle (1801); 'Whiggs,' the Northumberland reproach for Presbyterians, still in use in some inland localities. In Newcastle they and other Nonconformists were called 'quigs,' HARDY Denham Tracts (ed. 1892) 351.

Hence (1) Whiggery, sb. the practices or tenets of Presbyterians or Covenanters; (2) Whigling, sb. a contemptuous term for a 'Whig.'

(1) Sc. (JAM.); I'll hae nae whiggery in the barony of Tillietudlem, SCOTT Old Mortality (1816) vii. Twd. The country below it was still loyal and with no taint of whiggery, BUCHAN J. Burnet (1898) 309. (2) Ff. Let graceless whiglings jibe an' jeeer, SMART Rhymes (1834) 131.

2. A rogue.

1. A small fish, apparently the young of the salmon-trout, Salmo trutta. Cf. whitling.

Sc. (JAM., s.v. Whitling). Per. In the Tay, above Perth, it is called the Lammis whiting, from its appearance in the river at that season, WALKER Trans. Highl. Soc. 11. 354 (ib.). Dmf. From the end of June, till close-time, there is abundance of fish after floods, in Esk, . . . such as salmon grilse, sea-trout, and whitens as they are named here, or hrlings, as they are called in Annandale, Statist. Acc. XIV. 410 (ib.). n.Cy. Border Gl. (Coll. L.L.B.); n.Cy.<sup>1</sup> (s.v. Whitling). Cum.<sup>4</sup> The word whiting is peculiar to Carlisle and district; there is great doubt still existing as to whether it is a distinct fish or only the grilse stage of the salmon-trout—Salmo trutta; the fish is common to most rivers containing sea-trout, and runs up the Eden in large numbers, but never very far up. . . The prefix 'silver' distinguishes the ordinary whiting—Gadus merlangus—from the river whiting.

The one 'down' then places his right foot at right angles to his left, and brings the left in advance of the right, sideways, and lastly, the right close and parallel to the left. So the game goes on until one player cannot leap the distance, when he is forced to make the back. But he does not commence at the first place again, but takes the last position of the one 'down' before him; and now the players may hop to reach the back. When another player fails, he goes 'down,' and a stride is added to the hop, and, finally, a hop, stride, and jump are allowed. The player that fails now, begins at taw again, and the game goes on ad lib. (6)

N.Cy.<sup>1</sup> Nhb.<sup>1</sup> Two boys start hand in hand from a 'bay,' and endeavour to touch their opponents. Anyone touched must return with them to the bay and join hands with the first to make a fresh sally. The numbers thus receive constant accessions; but if the chain of hands be broken, the sally has proved a failure, and each outsider endeavours to capture and ride in triumph on the back of one of his quondam pursuers. The broken and scattered rank is re-formed as soon as all have reached the bay, and each fresh sally is begun with a chorus:—'Widdy-widdy-way: the morrow's the market day; Slyarter, slyarter; comin away, comin away!' Cum.<sup>4</sup> A boy having been 'counted out' by the saying of the following rhyme, 'Ikey, pikey, penny pie; popalorum, jiggum, jye; stand thee oot lug,' cries 'Widdy widdy way, Widdy widdy way; snatch an' a bobbin an' away, way, way! Snatch! t'first yan I catch,' runs after one of the others, and if he succeeds in catching him lifts his hat and strikes the other one on the head, saying, 'Help me to catch aw t'rest.' They then make for the 'den' hand in hand, trying also to touch one of the other boys; should holds be broken, these two go straight 'home,' whilst the rest try to catch them and ride 'home' on their backs. There are variations of this game. w.Yks. (S.P.U.) Lon. 'Whiddy, whiddy, way, if you don't come, I won't play.' The players, except one, stand in a den or home. One player clasps his hands together, with the two forefingers extended. He sings out the above, and the boys who are 'home' then cry—'Warning once, warning twice, Warning three times over; When the cock crows out come I, Whiddy, whiddy, wake-cock. Warning!' This is called 'saying their prayers.' The boy who begins must touch another boy, keeping his hands clasped as above. These two then join hands, and pursue the others; those whom they catch also joining hands, till they form a long line. If the players who are in the home run out before saying their prayers, the other boys have the right to pummel them, or ride home on their backs, GOMME Games (1898) ll. 374. Cor.<sup>1</sup>; Cor.<sup>2</sup> The following is said in starting children for a race: 'Widdy, widdy, way, Is a very pretty play, Once, twice, three times, And all run away.' Off.

WILTSHIRE, sb. Wil. In comb. (1) Wiltshire disorder, obs., a disease in sheep: the 'goggles'; (2) — eye, see below; (3) — weed, the common elm, Ulmus campestris.

(1) The reason, perhaps, why this complaint has been lately [1794] known as the Wiltshire disorder, is, that most of the Wiltshire wethers are sold off when lambs, and are fattened before they are two years old; and the pushing them with high keep at so early an age, will most assuredly discover the goggles, if they be in the blood, DAVIS Gen. View Agric. 146. (2) The 'Wiltshire eye' is known to recruiting officers. It is a muddy hazel-grey very prevalent in the county, and common also in the West Riding of Yorks. The recruiting surgeons seem to have classified it as hazel, but some would call it grey. I make it neutral. . . Eyes of a neutral undecided tint between light and dark, and green brown and grey, . . . the 'Wiltshire eye,' Wil. N. & Q. I. 566. (3) Wil.<sup>1</sup> This is a term frequently occurring in books and articles on Wilts, but it would not be understood by the ordinary Wiltshire folk.

WILVER, sb. Cor. [wi'l'və(r).] A pot or 'baker' under which bread is buried in burning embers and baked. Cor.<sup>12</sup> See Whelwe. Hence Wilver-loaf, sb. a loaf baked under a 'wilver.' Cor.<sup>3</sup>

Nurses used to amuse infants on the knee by sitting in front of the fire holding the forefinger to it as if to heat it, and then pretending to bore a hole in the infant's breast or belly, repeating the words: 'Heata womill, heat a womill. Bore, bore, bore' (W.G.). w.Yks.<sup>1</sup> I only hear the words used by old folks now, hummed in the lines below to a child on one's knee, the forefinger of the adult representing the 'whimble.' . . 'Heat a whimble, heat a coile, Wheare mun I buddle a hoile?' At the utterance of the first word, the adult who is playing with the child will begin a circular movement of the hand with the outstretched forefinger, and at each word the tormenting finger is made to gyrate nearer to the little laughing curled-up youngster, until the word 'buddle' (to bore) is reached. Then the tickling begins, Leeds Merc. Suppl. (Feb. 24, 1900).

3. A tool used in mining; see below.

(1) s.Chs.<sup>1</sup> (2) n.Sc. She bade anc near the door stan' still, Or fate shou'd something gie her; She wand the clue wi' tentie han', An' cries 'Wha hauds the end o'!' TARRAS Poems (1804) 68 (JAM.); In this [Hallowe'en] incantation the person had to go secretly and in the gloaming to the kiln, carrying a clue of blue worsted thread. This clue was cast into the kiln-logie. The end of the thread, however, was retained, and the performer unrolled the clue, forming a new one. Towards the end it was held tight. It was then demanded who held the thread. A voice answered, giving the name of the future husband or wife, GREGOR Olden Time, 104. Abd. There was one spell which seemed to Bell more manageable and less daunting than the rest—the 'winding of the clue in the kiln,' GREIG Logie o' Buchan (1899) 28. (3) s.Lan.<sup>1</sup> (4) Ess. All the players join hands and form a long line. They should stand in sizes, the tallest should be the first, and should stand quite still. All the rest walk round this tallest one, singing—'Wind up the bush faggot, and wind it up tight, Wind it all day and again at night,—to the first part of the tune, . . . that in 3-8 time. This is repeated until all the players are wound round the centre or tallest player, in a tight coil. Then they all sing—'Stir up the dumplings, the pot boils over,'—to the second part of the tune in 2-4 time. This is repeated, all jumping simultaneously to the changed time, until there is a general scrimmage, with shrieking and laughter, and a break up. The players should look somewhat like a watch-spring. As soon as the last one is wound up, no matter in what part of the 3-8 music they may be, they leave off and begin to jump up and down, and sing to the 2-4 music, GOMME Games (1898) 11. 384-5. (1) Abd. Two are chosen—one to represent the wolf and the other the lamb. The other players join hands and form a circle round the lamb. The wolf tries to break through the circle and carry off the lamb. Those in the circle do all they can to prevent the wolf from entering within the circle. If he manages to enter the circle and seize the lamb, then other two are chosen, Gomme Games (1898) II. 399. (2) w.Yks.<sup>1</sup>, e.An.<sup>1</sup>, Suf.<sup>1</sup>

2. A children's game; see below.

[One player acts as shepherd, and stands at one side of the playground or field; another acts as wolf. He crouches in one corner, or behind a post or tree. The other players are sheep, and stand close together on the opposite side of the ground to the shepherd. The shepherd advances and calls the sheep. At the end of the dialogue the sheep run across to the shepherd and the wolf pounces out, chases, and tries to catch them. Whoever he catches has to stand aside until all are caught, Gomme Games (1898) II. 397-8.] w.Yks. 'Sheep, sheep, come home!' 'We dare not.' 'What are you frightened of?' 'The wolf.' Two long parallel lines were drawn about fifty yards apart, forming bases behind them. Two boys stood some distance apart between the bases, and the rest of the players all stood within one base. One of the two boys in the centre acting as decoy cried, 'Sheep, sheep, come home!' The sheep represented by the boys in the base cried back, 'We can't, we're afraid of the wolf.' The decoy then said—'The wolf's gone to Devonshire, and won't be back for seven year. Sheep, sheep, come home.' The sheep then made rushes from different points, and tried to get across to the other base. The other player in the centre tried to catch the sheep as they ran. Those caught joined the side of the wolf, and caught others in their turn, ib. 398. Ken. ib. Sur. ib. 397-8. Sus. The wolf chases until he has caught all the sheep, and put them in his den. He then pretends to taste them, and sets them aside as needing more salt. The shepherd or mother comes after them, and the sheep cover their heads with their aprons. The mother guesses the name of each child, saying, 'This is my daughter—run away home!' until she has freed them all, ib. 398. Wil. ib. 397-8.

WROTH SILVER, phr. War. See below.

The Duke of Buccleuch holds annually on Knightlow Hill, near Coventry, at daybreak on November 11, what is called 'an audit of wroth silver,' to which twenty-seven parishes in Warwickshire are called upon to contribute. It is supposed to be a survival of an ancient custom of paying fees for passing over certain high-ways. Yesterday a crowd numbering several hundreds attended at 7 a.m., and gathered round an old stone cross, where the Duke's agent read the charter. He then read out the names of the contributing places. From some a penny was demanded, others more—in all, 9s. 4d. The money was readily paid by the assembly, and afterwards the people adjourned to the village inn, where breakfast was served. To this the Duke makes a monetary contribution, and provided glasses of hot rum and milk, in which his health was drunk to the accompaniment of musical honours, Scotsman (Nov. 12, 1902); At the summit of Knightlow Hill, in the pretty village of Dunchurch, is an old mound, with a large stone in the centre. The stone has a big hollow, and into this cavity money is poured before sunrise on St. Martin's Day of every year. The sums contributed vary from a penny to over two shillings, but the total does not exceed half-a-sovereign. The penalty for every penny not forthcoming is twenty shillings, or the forfeiture of 'a white bull with red nose and ears.' The payment is made by neighbouring parishes for the privilege of using certain roads, Dy. Chron. (Nov. 13, 1900); In 1879 at 6.45 in the morning (November 11) the 'wroth-money' was collected, TIMMINS Hist. War. (1889) 218.

Sc. (JAM.) Rs. There are a good number of salmon caught on the sea-coast, sometimes by nets and cobles, . . . but chiefly by means of yaire, or small enclosures, built in a curve or semicircular form near the shore. At high water the salmon comes within these yaire, and at low water is easily taken, having no way to escape, Statist. Acc. I. 282 (ib.). Mry. An enclosure, formed of stakes wattled with twigs or brush-wood. . . The vestiges of three different yaars may be still traced on the sands. From 8 to 12 barrel of salmon used formerly to be the produce. . . On some occasions, herrings, but rarely, have been found inclosed, SHAW Hist. Mry. (1882) II. 162. Ctc. Upon the point of these inches, they erect what are called yaire, a sort of scaffold projecting into the water, upon which they build little huts to protect them from the weather; from these scaffolds they let down at certain times of the tide, their nets, and are often very successful in taking the smaller fish, Statist. Acc. XVIII. 597 (JAM.). Dmb. A yare is built of stones . . . about four feet in height, and of considerable length, and stretches out into the river in the form of a crescent, or of three sides of a square; but to give it a probability of succeeding, it must proceed from a point of land, so as to inclose a bay, ib. XVII. 217. 'But that measures more than a yard,' remarked my husband; 'that must be nearly a rod long.' 'Oh, yes; but we call that a yard down here,' was the reply, ib. (1893) No. 13. Cor. The linear rod, pole, perch, or land yard is 5 $\frac{1}{2}$  yards of 3 feet in imperial measure, 6 yards or 18 feet in Cornish. The square rod, pole, perch, or land yard is of course the square of this, and 160 of them make the acre in either measure. YARELY, see Early.

YAREWINDS, sb. pl. Obs. Shr.<sup>1</sup> A machine for holding yarn intended to be made into skeins or wound into balls. See below.

The yarewinds consisted of a reel and stand. The reel was a stock something like the nave of a wheel, with four arms, inserted crosswise, i.e. at opposite diameters; these arms were perforated at regular distances from the end, to receive the tall wooden pins round which the yarn was wound. By means of the holes—about five in each arm—the pins could be adjusted to 'slippings,' or skeins, of various lengths. The stand consisted of a small block, forming an apex, as it were, to the three legs which supported it, and having in its centre a pivot upon which the reel rotated. (A tripod, to serve as a stand for the reel, would sometimes be rudely fashioned by cutting a three-forked branch to the requisite length, and inverting it.) The whole affair was about two feet and a half from the ground. When spinning was a household industry, yarewinds supplemented the wheel; the yarn spun and twisted on the latter being wound on the reel, as the succeeding process by which the 'slippings' were formed. Linen-yarn, when it had been made into 'slippings,' was bleached, and afterwards returned to the yarewinds, from which it was wound into balls for the cottage weaver. Spinning-wheels and yarewinds were in use about 1840, and probably at a later date still.

Chs.<sup>1</sup> In use sixty or seventy years since. s.Chs.<sup>1</sup> Shr.<sup>1</sup> Yarnacles were, for all intents and purposes, the same as the yarewinds previously described, q.v.; but they were somewhat simpler in construction, the reel being merely two flat pieces of wood laid one over the other,—like a S. Andrew's Cross, in form,—with a hole in the middle to enable it to rotate on a pivot. The arms were perforated like those of the yarewinds, and for the same reasons; the tall pegs holding the yarn being fitted into the holes at the compass required by the skein. A pedestal, or stand of some kind, having a pivot in the centre, served for the reel to work upon.

On Malvern Hills, when the common people fan their corn and want wind, they cry by way of invocation, 'Youle, youle, youle,' which word (sais Mr. Aubrey) is no doubt a corruption of Æolus, God of winds (K.).

YOULIN, see Yoldring.

YOULING, sb. Obs. Ken. See below. See Youle.

There is an odd custom used in these parts about Keston and Wickham, in Rogation Week; at which time a number of young men meet together for the purpose, and with a most hideous noise, run into the orchards, and, incircling each tree, pronounce these words: 'Stand fast, root; bear well, top; God send us a youling sop. Every twig apple big, Every bough apple enow.' For which incantation the confused rabble expect a gratuity in money, or drink. . . If they are disappointed . . . they with great solemnity anathematize the owners and trees. . . 'It seems highly probable that this custom has arisen from the antient one of Perambulation, . . . and as the heathens supplicated Æolus, God of the winds, for his favorable blasts, so in this custom they still retain his name with a very small variation; this ceremony is called Youling,' HASTED *Hist. Lan., Som., Dev., &c. Although the 'Cheshire acre' was formerly much used in South Lancashire as the local measure of land, in other parts of the country a measure known as the 'Lancashire acre' was in use. This contained 7,540 sq. yds., and I have seen it stated that this is the same as the 'Irish acre.' In Devonshire and part of Somerset I believe there is, or was, a customary acre of 4,000 sq. yds. Most if not all of these local measures resulted from variations in the number of yards in the lineal pole or perch; thus, statute, 5½; Devonshire, &c., 5; Cornwall, 6; Lancashire and Irish, 7; Cheshire, 8 (G.H.H.). Bdf. Fencing is measured by the acre, which is only another term for a chain, or four poles, BACHELOR Agric. (1813) 593. Cor.<sup>2</sup> An acre in Cor. Abd. The lads place their bonnets (caps) on the ground against a wall in such a way as easily to receive a ball rolled or pitched into one of them by a boy with shut eyes. He rolls or pitches from a stance three or four yards from the wall. When he manages to get the ball into one of the bonnets, the owner of that bonnet seizes the ball and hits one of the rest now scampering off. The lad thus hit has a small stone put into his cap. If no one be hit, the boy that missed gets a stone put into his cap. Three stones in the cap excludes the owner from the game, which goes on till only one is left (G.W.). Nal. The players place their bonnets or caps in a pile. They then join hands and stand in a circle round it. They then pull each other, and twist and wriggle round and round and over it, till one overturns it or knocks a bonnet off it. The player who does so is hoisted on the back of another, and pelted by all the others with their bonnets, GOMME Games (1894) I. 43.

BUTTONS, sb. pl. Abd. A boys' game; see below. See also Buttony.

Buttons was no less popular [than 'bools'], and keen contests, creating great interest, engaged attention as to who, from 20 or 30 feet distant, would pitch their buttons nearest the 'mote,' which was a little piece of white china or crockery as a mark to be aimed at—somewhat similar to the 'tee' in the game of bowls. When all the players had 'pitched' the one who was nearest the mote gathered them up, and shaking them in his closed hands, threw them in the air, and as they shewed, he got toll from those to whom they belonged, the tails were taken up, and the next player treated them in similar fashion, and so on, till they were exhausted. The buttons had distinctive names and values. Figs were vest buttons, chancers, double and single, were gilt coat buttons, which were worn on blue and olive green, and brown coats, a fashionable dress of the period [1840-]. Bossies were larger, and generally the cast-offs of military or naval uniforms, or livery servants' coats. Four figs were equal in value to 1 chancer, and 2 chancers to one bossie, *Abd. Wkly. A neighbour who mixes with amateur musicians of all classes tells me that the members of local bands use this word in this meaning. 'Your instrument does not chord with mine' (is not in time with it, or of the same pitch). He has ascertained that the word is only used in connexion with vocal or instrumental music, and is not used in the same sense as accord, 'I don't accord with him' (E.S.).
